COLLECTION OF WOOD-WORK AND FURNITURE

VARIOUS specimens of carved wood recently purchased by the Museum, together with important gifts from Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, and ranging from fifteenth century Gothic through the Renaissance to the period of Louis XVI in France, have been arranged in Gallery 4 on the first floor, and the room is now open to the public.

The Bulletin has noted and described these acquisitions from time to time, and in some instances has illustrated them. Dynamiting for the foundation of the new wing of the Museum necessitated boarding up the windows of Gallery 4, and delayed the exhibition of the collection until this month.

The examples have been divided into four groups, Gothic, Renaissance, German Renaissance and French eighteenth century. Visitors will be impressed with the many beautiful pieces, and, generally speaking, with the very interesting exhibit as a whole. Against the west wall is shown the fifteenth century Gothic group. There are several credences, or buffets and ten chest fronts, among which will be found fine examples of both early and decorated tracery, the linen-fold pattern, as it is called, and two unusual specimens of the transition period between Gothic and Renaissance. An interesting reredos (the carved screen for the back of an altar), showing Italian influences, and a Pietà (the image of the Virgin with the dead Christ), nearly life-size, both painted, are hung above two of the credences. A double choir-stall with hinged seats, and some ten statues arranged on pedestals and brackets, complete the Gothic group. The statues are especially worthy of mention in their beauty and interest and their excellent state of preservation.

The east wall has been used for the Renaissance pieces, which are principally French and of the sixteenth century. Of three cabinets the central one is late in the century, crowned with a pediment, and enriched with small marble panels. The four doors are carved with graceful female figures bearing musical instruments. The other two cabinets, also French, are interesting examples of the third period of the Renaissance, 1547-1560. With the cabinets stand chests of the same period, and above them on the wall are hung various panels ranging from early in the century, when the Gothic tradition was still felt, to the final florescence of the Renaissance. Two interesting Italian marriage coffers, one in gesso work, a composition decoration, both painted and gilt, are placed in proximity, while against the south side of the room, and continuing the Renaissance group, stand two great German cabinets dating from the middle of the seventeenth century. These cabinets are good examples of the period in Germany, and show in their large size and prevailing architectural construction, being faced with pillars, pilasters, cornices and pediments, the feeling of revolt from Gothic influence and style. A great cabinet much like these was given in 1556 to the Church of St. Mary Overie by Hugh Offley, then Lord Mayor of London.

Against the north wall the small panels and examples of the LouisXIV-Louis XVI period have been hung, with two large panels, one of which still retains its original colors and gilding. With this group, and in order to obtain the proper light for the delicate carving, two screens have been used for the eight pilaster fronts given by Mr. Morgan, and three large Louis XIV panels formerly in the Bibliothèque Royale. The pilaster fronts, among the most perfect and exquisite examples of wood carving in existence, are thèque Nationale are worthy pendants to the foregoing. They, too, were originally painted and gilt, and have also been perfectly restored to their first condition, disclosing the full modeling and crispness of the carving. Of a more severe and magnifisculptured from designs by Salembier, a notable designer and engraver in the time of Louis XVI. He excelled in "sculptures in the flat," and these panels bear witness to his elegance of style, being carved with foliage, vases of flowers, torches, caryatides, cups, birds, fowls, grotesques and monograms, executed with masterly skill and beauty. The panels were originally painted and gilt. They have been carefully and very successfully cleaned, and one may now study them as they left the hands of the carver. Originally in the Lelong Collection, Paris, they were purchased at the sale of that collection in 1903.

The three large panels from the Biblio-cent period than the pilaster fronts, they exhibit in an extraordinary degree the extent to which artists bent their efforts in the adornment of palaces under Louis XIV. Carved in French oak of a close grain, as are the eight smaller panels, it has been possible to preserve these valuable examples almost intact to the present day.

Above the carvings the walls have been hung with tapestries, adding a note of color to the room, and forming an excellent background. The collection repays earnest study, and the various pieces on exhibition cannot fail to arouse interest in the mind of the lover of things beautiful as well step the artist and craftsman.

IN a report presented to the Trustees of the Museum last winter, the Committee on Sculpture expresses itself substantially as follows:

"The collection of bronzes in the Museum is mainly confined to the reproductions of the busts and statuettes found at Herculaneum, there being few important works in bronze of contemporary sculptors. Much sculpture in bronze has been produced in this country, of historic interest as well as of artistic value, and, in our judgment, this fact might well be recognized within reasonable limits. The expenditure of a sum of money equal to the cost of one original work of antiquity or of one moderately important picture would create a whole collection of small bronzes which would be of popular interest and would tend to stimulate this important department of art. It is suggested therefore, that the collection of modern works of sculpture be extended in this direction, and that a collection of bronzes be made which shall illustrate the modern development of this art, especially in the United States."

In accordance with this recommendation, and with the approval of the Trustees, twenty small bronzes by prominent American sculptors have been secured as a nucleus about which a comprehensive collection may be made by purchase, and, it is hoped, by gift, as occasion offers. A number of sculptures, also, not immediately available, have been selected for purchase, and it is hoped that they will be added to the present collection during the coming winter. Among these are works by Ward, Saint Gaudens, Kemeys, MacMonnies, and others.

It is probable that comparatively few people are aware of how much excellent work in the way of small bronzes suitable for household decoration has been done by American Sculptors, and it is one of the purposes of this collection to demonstrate this fact to the public.

The important additions to the collection of sculpture made during the past year—the group in bronze by Gutzon Borglum, presented by Mr. James Stillman; Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Wait's gift of the set of medallion portraits of Indians, by Olin L. Warner; and Mr. Edward Holbrook's gift of Rimmer's Dying Centaur—have already received notice and acknowledgment in the Bulletin. Mr. Hearn's recent contribution to the collection of the piece called "Enthroned," by Mrs. Vonnoh, should be mentioned in this connection, not only as an acknowledgment of this fresh instance of his generosity to the Museum, but as an example to others who may be moved to follow Mr. Hearn's initiative in this direction.

Acknowledgment, also, should be made of the generous spirit in which the sculptors have met the Committee in their efforts to form this collection, in many cases furnishing their works at prices only sufficient to bronze.

While all the bronzes thus far acquired are by American sculptors, it is not the intention to confine the collection to native work, but ultimately to secure notable examples by foreign sculptors as well. Some preliminary steps already have been taken towards this end, and soon there will be placed on exhibition the following works by contemporary English sculptors: "Eve," by Thomas Brock, R. A.; "The Sluggard," and "Needless Alarms," by Lord Leighton, P. R. A.; "Tragedy and Comedy," and "Perseus," by Alfred Gilbert, R.A.; "Spring" and "Innocence," by Alfred Dewey, A. R. A.; and "Pean" by E. Onslow Ford, R.A. A replica of Rodin's famous statue, "The Age of Bronze," lent to the Museum by Mrs. Simpson, sets a standard of excellence that it will be difficult to maintain.

The following is a list of the American sculptors already represented, and of the bronzes acquired, which will be found in the Room for Recent Accessions. (Floor I, Room 3).

PAINTINGS BY AMERICAN ARTISTS IN THE MUSEUM

I NQUIRIES are frequently received at the Museum as to the American painters who are represented in its collections. It has therefore been thought desirable to publish in the Bulletin a complete list of these, including the titles of their works which are either owned by or lent to the Museum at the present time. The following list has accordingly been compiled by Mr. A. d'Hervilly, of the staff of the Museum. It is arranged chronologically, and shows that there are in the Museum 311 paintings by American artists, of which 300 are its property, and 11 are lent. Of the total number 186 are now (August, 1906) on exhibition in the galleries.

NOTES

THE LIBRARY.—The additions to the Library during the past month have been as follows

eum of Fine Arts, Cincinnati Museum Assciation, Columbia University, Harvard University, Mechanics Institute, Rochester, N. Y., Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts, Messrs. F. Muller and Company, National Portrait Gallery, London, England, New York Historical Society, Pennsylvania Museum and school of Industrial Art, Provinzial Museum, Hanover, Germany, Mr.

Talbot Jones Taylor.

The increase in the number of persons using the Library made it necessary to provide more room for readers, and this was accomplished by the removal of the four large exhibition cases in which were displayed illuminated manuscripts and early printed books, and the placing in the Library of four reading tables, accomodating sixteen more persons.

The illuminated manuscripts and early printed books are now exhibited in Gallery

In accordance with the wish of the executors of the late Heber R. Bishop, copies of the large volumes containing the catalogue of the Jade Collection have been placed in the Bishop gallery. Those desiring to consult the book will find another copy in the Library.

PRINCIPAL ACCESSIONS

A STAINED GLASS WINDOW.—To one branch at least of Decorative Art American artists have given a novel and personal development—to the art of stained glass. The result obtained by Mr. La Farge and others by the use of partly fused colors in one piece of glass is similar to the jewel effect of certain medieval windows, where the incrustations of centuries have changed what was a flat color into a variety of tints. The result is a richness and sparkle of color for which the European craftsman, with his ideals of exactness of form and design and detail, has not striven.

Although the Museum has as yet no example of this opalescent, or American, glass, as it is called, a start toward what may be a general collection of modern glass has been made in the window entitled "La Danse des Fiancailles," by Luc-Oliver Merson, and executed by Oudinot, of Paris, that has been received through the bequest of Mrs. Adelaide Mott Bell. It is an "apartment window," for use in a dwellinghouse, and consequently is designed with luminous colors and but few lead lines, so that the light may not be intercepted. It is the type of window for which, more than any other, the fantastic and pleasant art of M. Merson is best fitted, and which admits, too, of a wealth of detail.

The costumes of the figures and the accessories are of the epoch of the Renaissance. Architectural ornament of this period makes a framework for the pretty scene of the lovers and their friends dancing a stately dance, while musicians play upon strange instruments.

It would have been difficult to procure a better or more impeccable example of French stained glass of our own time.

Japanese Imperial Decorations and Medals.—A valuable gift of an unusual and striking character has just been received by the Museum from Mr. Jacob H. Schiff and Mr. Edward D. Adams. This consists of a series of the decorations of the Imperial orders and of the medals of Japan, the issue of which was authorized by the Japanese government, upon the application of Mr. Schiff, and at the suggestion of Mr. Adams, for the express purpose of the gift.

The collection is composed of forty-six objects, of which a number are in gold, many in silver, and a few in bronze. Several of the orders are jeweled, and most of them are enameled. All are accompanied by their corresponding sashes, ribbons and buttons, and appropriately mounted on silk in lacquered cases.

The insignia comprise the various classes of decoration issued under the following Imperial Orders:

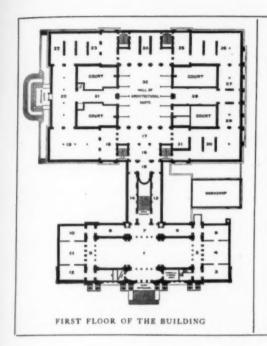

Supreme Order of the Chrysanthemum. Order of the Crown.

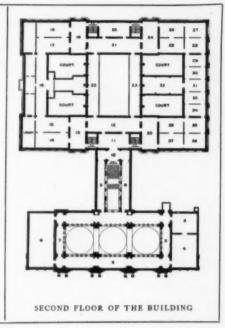

Military Order of the Golden Kite.

Order of the Rising Sun.
Order of the Sacred Treasure.

The medals include four that are known as Medals of Honor, each class being given for different services to the Nation or its people. Other medals are commemorative, and include those distinctively known as War medals.
